TROUBLE

Starts On Page One

questions not only of our time but of the centuries. This is so because the world is undergoing a vast change—and the Big Three are the dominant powers. Their unity is the safeguard against another global war which would be catastrophic. It has become a truism that so long as they stand together we can have peace, and that if they fall out we shall get trouble.

We are going to get an early test of Big Three solidarity. The laboratory is going to be defeated Germany within whose borders the Allied armies of occupation will be stationed. There we shall see combined all the strange factors which will inaugurate a new era for Europe—a Europe far different from anything we have known.

The chief chemists are going to be the Big Three, and they'll be combining substances whose reaction they don't know. There likely to be explosions, and some of them may be violent.

ANOTHER UPHEAVAL? Well, now, does this European metamorphosis, with all its political and economic differences of viewpoint, necessarily lead to another world upheaval?

The signs don't read that way to me. Certainly it's going to require a lot of give and take among the Big Three to maintain balance, but thus far there's no unsurmountable obstacle in sight.

Russia is extending her sphere of influence westward on the continent, and probably will do so in the Orient. That's a natural corollary to her emergence from the war as a dominant power of the eastern hemisphere. The indications also are that Moscow is encouraging the efforts of communist elements in various countries to establish Soviet governments. However, there is no sign so far as I can see that Russia is bent on territorial expansion as such.

SUSPICIOUS It strikes me that the basic difficulty among the Big Three lies in suspicions of one another—that probably is mainly due to lack of acquaintance.

For a generation now Russia has been living within herself and has become a stranger. But the attitude of the Russian people seems to be friendly enough when they turn out and shout "Long live the great American people."

I think we are justified in believing that trouble with Russia is not inevitable.
