INDUSTRY WAITS GM'S ANSWER

Today At 4 Deadline For Accepting Arbitration Proposal

DETROIT, Nov. 20—(AP)—The automobile industry—from the unskilled workers right through the front offices—today anxiously awaited General Motors' reply to a union proposal for submission of the tense wage dispute to arbitration.

Delegates to the General Motors council of the CIO United Auto Workers Union approved the offer late yesterday and gave the big corporation 24 hours to make a decision.

Interest centered largely around these questions:

1. Would General Motors accept the arbitration proposal by the 4 p.m. (EST) deadline set by the union, thus opening the way for possible settlement by the same method of disputes involving other automotive companies, which, like GM, are facing 30 per cent wage increase demands?

2. Would it reject the offer, thus opening the way for possible strike action by the delegates and the union's six-man strategy committee empowered by the International UAW-CIO to act as it sees fit?

3. Would the corporation, as intimated by President C. E. Wilson, ask for more time to study the proposal and would the union be willing to grant such an extension?

Anxiety was heightened by the fact that the GM council, representing more than 300,000 workers throughout the nation, was scheduled to adjourn one hour after the deadline.

Whether rejection of the proposal would prompt the delegates to recommend immediate strike action remained to be seen, but one informed union spokesman said he believed it would.
