PROPOSALS

For Publishing in Lincoln, North-Carolina a Weekly Newspaper, to be called the Lincoln Herald.

THE undersigned being ardently solicited by many of his friends to undertake the publication of a newspaper in this village, has been induced to offer these proposals, relying on public patronage, for that support necessary to justify him in the prosecution of the same.

His main object will be to instruct, to please, to excite to usefulness, to add to social enjoyment, and to expose whatever has an evil tendency in our morals.

It will be his purpose to give all the important news, both foreign and domestic, to insert agricultural essays, and to diffuse information on all subjects that have a tendency to improve society in its various relations.

He will intersperse literary information, as well as scientific instruction, mingling at the same time, a flavor of poetry, humor and anecdotes in order to present a variety, so that each individual may find something to gratify his particular taste.

He professes to be a republican, both in principle and feeling; his political course, therefore, will be to pursue, (according to his judgment) the traces marked out by the Old Jeffersonian School—avoiding on the one hand, that exposition of the Constitution, which leads to consolidation, and shuttling on the other, the equally dangerous doctrine of nullification.

He has, as heretofore, the highest regard for the character of Andrew Jackson, and the utmost confidence in his administration. He leaves himself entirely uncommitted as regards his successor—free to support, whenever the exigency arises, whatever individual in his opinion, from his character, talents, and sound principles, is entitled to occupy that elevated station.

All personal controversies will be strictly prohibited, and every exertion will be made to prevent such papers as will be acceptable to the public.

The HERALD will be published once a week, on an imperial sheet, at three dollars per annum. The first No. will be issued on the first of January 1834, or as soon thereafter as practicable, provided a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to authorize the commencement.
