THE PHILOSOPHER AND THE MERCHANT.

Wisdom is the science of life. In the capital of an eastern kingdom lived many ages since Seid Ali, a man so devoted to science, that he neglected every thing else He had made many profound and important discoveries, of which others had a-ments, his health impaired by study, his temper soured by reglect. He had for a neighbour and acquaintance Ghulam Hussan, known throughout the city by the name of the honest merchant. Hassan had begun the world with very little education and no money, but in recompense, he had a straightforward understanding, quick observation, a very agreeable frankness of manner, and a heart without guile. Consequently he was universally courted, and though much given to hospitality and the performance of very generous acts, he had amassed a considerable fortune. To him, griefs. When he had finished-"I have a few friends coming to sup with me this evening," said Hassan; " he of the party, and when they are gone, we take this purse for present exigencies. I witl enable you soon to repay me. How

Kind intentions need no preface. The moment the guests were gone, Hassan began thus :-

"You see, my friend, you have kept is the fame of a dead man. You have, the dis continue of the surplus revenue unpopul caused vast benefits to be derived to the lar. We complain that Bank Directors create world, but the world has searcely seen a scarcity of money in order to create usurious you, and, of course, never thinks of rewithout dishonour. You remember our to carry on donestic exchanges. The Giore a going this time two years to my little country place, near that singularity amongst us, the ancient aqueduct. I cannot tell you we fice it the better -our country is growing of how much I was struck with your conject- and strong, and in it stage and streng in like all ures as to its origin, and your observations o hers, it is growing corrupt. Now the old man who used to occupy my house, and accompany visiters to the ruins, is lately dead, and what I propose is, that you should disguise yourself and take his place. You know what an extensive acquaintance have, and the terms upon which I live tem, now untegritated and above all control, is with them. I will take care to make par- used (not in all cases, but alas! too often) first to ties to the aqueduct, and you, in a homely carried the politicans of the country, and the 5 00; Sugar per lb. 12 1 2 a 15 cts; Salt pr garb, shall be their guide. Every thing moneyed men, and then to rob from the many tainments in such a situation cannot by posstrikes by contrast, and a man of your at. sibility but soon to attract sufficient notice to accomplish all you desire."

"I do not know-" said Seid despondingly-"I dare say you do not," interrupted Hassan, "but you know this, that with my little knowledge I have gained a fortune and that with all yours you have lost one In matters of science," continued he bending low with unaffected homage, " I gat 371 40, Beeswax 25 a 00 Whiskey kiss the very ground you walk upon, but if they speak, they might be made beggars of in ginning the speak and the property of the property me. Well-grounded faith, my triend, take the word of a successful man, has great virtue in other things besides religion. Tomorrow I will arrange every thing-not another word-good night, and may heaven give you your deserts !"

Experience shows, that those who have fallen into a wrong train, frequently, meet with nothing but an unbroken series of adverse circumstances. Let them but change their course, and the exact reverse becomes the case; every thing turns to account. Just so it was with Scid. Being duly installed in his new office, his altered way of life quickly produced so great a change in he felt moreover, a great degree of confidence in himself, of which previously he had no idea. Hassan made frequent parues on his account; and his fame spread would have it, the vizier himself, who the brantifel, and Rome the proud, first into the meation is now construcing and constructed from time to time used to pass an evening with Hassan in the disguise of a brother merchant, sent at this conjuncture notice of his approach. He found in Hassan's company an agreeable relaxation from the cares of government, and the sophistications of the world; besides which he had looked public generally to call & examine for proof of in vain for any man, upon whose information and integrity he could implicitly rely. Hassan availed numself of the opportunity to induce the vizier to accompany him on an early day to his country place, and he like the rose. Upon their broad shoulders stand him to be well. The vizier though not si- them entifie, delighted in the conversation of the scientific men, and he had not long listened to Seid, before he remarked to Hassan, The trikes me this is a very extraordinary the Park bell was tolling, and the city was a

He deserves every thing and I want nothing."

> From the New York Daily Express. THE CURRENCY-THE SURPLUS REVENUE.

Now that the Presidential election is over, and we cannot be suspected of writing articles for an electioneering purpose, we tell our readers that it is our firm conviction that Mr. Van Buren comes into the Presidential Chair under an express understanding with many of the capitalists of the City and the State of New York, to keep the surplus revenue at their disposal, so that they may discount upon it, & shaves notes at the tune of thirty and forty per cent per annum! Hence that pold and manly avowal of his, that he is op posed to the distribution of this revenue-an a vowal in manimess and force so make his character, that it shows both as the only on the and the solitary meteor of his clearly life. Hence his mightly majority in the State of New York will talk of your affairs. In the mean time, which is not counted by hundress as it is, else where, but by TENS OF THOUSANDS!
