POETRY.

From the Lynchburg Virginian.

A PARODY,

Upon Moore's lines on the loss of the Sinking Fund.

Now, what, we ask, is become of the Surplus Revenue! those millions of Surplus, which were to be kept in the Pet Banks, from the fear that they would corrupt the people, if distributed? Where indeed, is the Surplus Revenue itself?—Late paper.

(Take your bell, take your bell,
Good crier, and tell,
To the Demo's—the full blooded Jackson crew—
That lost or stolen,
Or fall'n through a hole, in
The Pretty Pet Banks, is the Revenue.

O yes, O yes,
Can any body guess
What has become of this Treasury wonder?
It has Benton's name on't,—
All brass in the front,
And Jackson's, scrawled with a goose quill under!

Some folks knew what
Would soon be their lot,
When Benton—[illegible] Decimal hog;
And [illegible]
[illegible]
We make Gos Surplus?—rich wealth—a thing?"

We are come, alas!
To a very pretty pass,
When [illegible]
When even those millions have "cracked the pitch"!

Sent off, stupified!
[illegible]
Those [illegible] fill-me-air, piercing rattle—
[illegible]
C[illegible] Kendall—we're in ruin!—
Call the "Greatest and Best," to spring his rattle.

Who'er will restore
The Revenue, or insure
The payment in gold, or in notes worth receiving
Shall be paid with thanks
In the notes of Pet Banks,
Which are even their very masters deceiving!

Where's Rives, little fellow,
So fond of "the yellow,"
Such a heap of notes under sweezy's or ten's?
Where's his fathom-coil,
All folks' pockets to foil
With gold shivers, now scarce as the teeth of hens?

Where's Blair? where's Wright?
Have they taken their flight?
O Blair! the Devil he's in his vocation—
With Croes Cato
Rocking uncle Sam,—
Slandering the good, and destroying the nation!

O yes, O yes,
Can any body guess
What the deuce has become of the Treasury wonder?
It has Benton's name on't,—
All brass in the front,
And Jackson's, scrawled with a goose quill under!

COME BROTHERS, AROUSE!

SUNG WITH GREAT APPLAUSE BY MR. [illegible]

Music at J. F. Nunns, 70 [illegible]

Come brothers, arouse, let the [illegible]
Oh, the summer sun's up in the sky,
The bee's on its wing, and the hawk's in his nest,
And the river run merrily by.

Our mother, the world, a good mother is she,
Says to toil is to welcome her fare,
Some bounty she hangs us on every tree,
And blesses us in the sweet air.

And this is the life for a man, a man,
And this is the life for me;
The Prince may boast of his domain, he can;
But he never was [illegible] so free;
Our mother, the world a good mother is she,
Says to toil is to welcome her fare:
Some bounty she hangs us on every tree
And blesses us in the sweet air.

Come brothers arouse, let the owl go to rest,
Oh, the summers sun's up in the sky.
The bee's on its wing, and the hawk's in his nest,
And the river runs merrily by.

[From the New York Evening Star.]

THE ROSE.

A tender Rose I tried to rear—
I nursed it through the parching year—
Shielding it in a sheltered bower,
In hopes to see its blushing flower
In summer glad mine eye

It thrived though every autumn blast
The winter's dreary storms were past—
When, with the spring, there fell a frost,
And all my pains and hopes were lost—
It caused my plant to die!

Sadly I watched its fate depart,
And felt the moral reach my heart:
"How often thus long cher shed joys,
Some unexpected blight destroys,
When least we think it [illegible]

The [illegible] of good breeding have been properly separated to the mouth and other soft material placed between china vases to prevent [illegible] broken by collision.

The more haste a man makes to unrival a skein of thread, the more he entangles it.
