THE BEAUTY OF LIBERTY.

In all things that have beauty, there is nothing to man more comely than liberty.

When the dance of the shadows At day-break is done, And the cheeks of the morning Are red with the sun;

When the beautiful bend Of the bow is above, Like a collar of light On the bosom of love;

In the depth of the darkness, Unvaried in hue, When shadows are veiling The breast of the blue,

When nature's awake, And calls up the chorus, To chaunt in the brake;

When the striving of surges Is mad on the main, Like the charge of a column Of flames on the plain;

When the striding of surges Is mad on the main, Like the charge of a column Of flames on the plain;

Pompeii is not a ruin, that is, not a monument of crumbling and mouldering decay; it is a forlorn city.

Here in this villa (his skeleton hands grasping coins, and jewels, and his coffee key) was found the perished master, stricken in his flight,

However, any attempt to describe Pompeii comes not within the compass of my plan of ability. Here we follow the antiquarian with a silent and thankful attention.

ate all to be found in this silent city. You pass among the columns of many temples, you enter the hall of judgment, and walk up between its Corinthian columns, and look about imperial decrees, you go into the theatre, and ascend a vineyard, to a noble amphitheatre, and ascending to the top, gaze out and forget every thing but the bright beauty of the scenery; turning to descend, you see where civilized Roman sat smiling, where the Numidian lion tore the frame of his captive foe, perhaps the brave blue-eyed Dacian; or frowning upon his youngest son, who at his visit to his games, would look at times pale, with an eye dimmed with a tear, but not degraded by allowing it to fall.
