He abused and slandered Henry Clay, who, he said, was on a tour through the Yankee States, endeavouring to " curry" favor with the Yankee—in a word, soliciting their Although I required no further evidence of the unfortunate and fatal duel than that shove referred to, through a fear, perhaps, that I might be little skeptical in the matter, Mr. Jones conduct ed me first to the duelling ground, which found " fairly and bonorably measured, " and stained in several places with blood, and then directed me to proceed to a house, some short distance from the spot, and ask for a handkerchief, which a woman, who had been brought to the field by the report of the pistols, had picked up, and which he feared might be used as an evidence against him. This I did, and, after having received from a woman such a handker-she saw the gentleman gallop away from the field after the shots were fired, that they carried off a dead body in a sack, and that the whole neighborhoud was in a state of the gteatest excitement. Of course there could now exist no doubt in any reasonable mind as to the fact of a fatal duel having been fought; and it only remained for me to assist Mr. Jones in carrying out the plan he had devised for his visit to Norfolk. Thither we arrived in safety ; and, as was to be expected, found the whole borough on fatal duel. Mr. Jones managed to escape public notoriety until about 12 o'clock at night, when, pursued from Norfolk to Portsmouth by a whole troop of officers, who, he informed me, had just returned from the duel ground +a distance of about twenty five miles-he called at my lodgings in Portsmouth; and, having spent a few minutes with me, set off for North Carolina on a swift horse, which my solicitude and apprehension of a pursuit had already provided for his departure. I started next morning in the North Carolina stage ; and, being dressed in Mr. Jones's clothes, felt no slight apprehensions for my own safety, when, about eight miles from town, I met some nine or ten constables, with green bags, and a grave looking coroner, returning after their fruitless search for the dead body of the unfortunate Wilson. They passed me by, however, and I, of course, congratulated myself on my happy escape.

Mr. Jones and I met some weeks after-he on his way to Texas, and I to the spot of " painful remembrance," where the duel took place, to remove some misgivings which, in the face

SALISBURY FEMALE ACADEMY.

THE Trustees of the Salisbury Female Academy, inform the public, that this Institution will be opened on Monday the 14th of October next. It is their intention to place this Seminary op a permanent and respectable basis; and no care will be wanting on their part, to render it in every respect, worthy of the confidence of the friends of education, morality and religion, who seek for their daughters a place where intellectual and moral culture combined, will prepare them to occupy with usefulness and dignity, the sphere to which they may be called.

They are now making all suitable efforts secure for Teachers, a gentleman and lady of high qualifications.

Meanwhile they have engaged Miss Emma . Baker, a young lady in whose literary qualifications and capacity for such a situation, they have perfect confidence; and who has hitherto attention. #### A MYSTERY SOLVED

Truth, it is said, is stranger than fiction. Cerainly, we have never read any fictitious narra tive more strange than the subjoined, which we copy from the Alexandria Gezette of yesterday. The fatal duel to which it refers was announced some months ago in this paper upon the au thority of a Norfolk paper, in which it was published, with very natural expressions of sympa thy for the mental suffering said to be felt and expressed by the survivor. Soon afterwards, and frequently since, it has been hinted, from different quarters, that the wholestory was a fabrication, no such duel having taken place. Belief in the story has however, been re-affiirmed, and it has been again contradicted, so that until now we have not been able to satisfy ourselves whether it was true or not. The initials signed to the following are those of a gentleman who has been referred to as authority for the story, which is of course completely exploded by this publication. Nat. Int.

From the Alexandria Gazette, Sept. 30.

The "NORTH CAROLINA DUEL."-In accordance with a promise made sometime since. York, duel whilet travelling from Elizabeth City of Tallow duel, whilst travelling from Elizabeth City to Norfolk, I stopped at the Dismal Swamp Hotel on the boundary line between Virginia and North Carolina, for the purpose of resting my horse and taking some refreshments .--I had not been seated many minutes, when I observed Mr. Jones, of Shocco, North Carolina, enter under much apparent perturbation, and evidently after a hard and long chase. After some few introductory preliminaries, Mr. Jones asked me out, and immediately informed me that he had just fought a duel, about eight miles ahead, with a gentleman from New York-that he had killed his opponent at the first fire-was pursued to the boundary line by the officers who had received intelligence of the fight, and that the unsettled state of his affairs compelled him to return to Norfulk ; to aid him in reaching which place, undiscovered by the police, he solicited my friendly assistance. The reasons urged in behalf of this request were of such a nature as to decide me, at once, in rendering him any aid in my power that might be likely to facilitate his visit to, and escape from, Norfolk, and I ac-cordingly agreed to his plan, that I should take his clothes and name, and accompany him to Norfolk ; and, in case of arrest or danger, pass myself off as Mr. Jones, until he was beyond the limits of Virginia.
