happy faculty of consummating measure which oppress our own people, and enrich the de of other countries .- Albany Eve. Jour, On this subject we also append the following extract from an editorial in the Lyncburg (Va.) Patriot :

The aftention of the reader has been heretofore called to the depressed state of the iron interest; . We have urged the importance of prompt and efficient action on the part of Con. gress to save this important branch of our industrial system from utter annihilation. In addition to national considerations, we have shown the importance to Virginia of sustaining this great interest, in which she has, prospectively at least, so vast a stake. At that time we did not fully appreciate the extent of em. barrassment to which this branch of production has been reduced by the pernicious operation of the fariff of '46. We perceive from the Val. ley Whig that a meeting of the iron-masters of Western Virginia has been called, " to take into consideration the present condition of the iron business, and to respond to the recent more of the Pennsylvania iron men," That paper expresses the belief that unless something is done at the next Congress to check the importation of foreign iron, and to relieve our manufacturers, there will not be a furnace in blast among us in 12 months. We observe, likewise, in the Railroad Journal, of September lit, that at least one bundred thousand tons of Railroad iron have either been received or ordered in this country in the last twelve months. at a cost of not less than $5,000,000. That this influx of foreign iron will continue, and that it will result in the entire overthrow of our own manufactories, is beyond all doubt.

THE OLD NORTH STATE.

Since Mr. Bancroft's researches into States has assigned the Mecklenburg de- the gravest man is usually a fool. claration of Independence, in 1775, the authenticity claimed for it, as well as its priority to the great document of July 4, 1776, North Carolina has acquired a new feather to her State cap of pride.

But this is not her only claim to patriotic distinction. Prior to the revolutionary war, a number of ladies-twelve or fifteen at Edenton, N. C., met casually to spend a social evening, and when tea was handed around one of the ladies remarked, that for one she would be willing not to taste a drop of tea, as long as England hould continue to oppress them by heavy taxation, &c. This proposition was unanimously responded to. The tea was thrown overboard, (as at Boston.) and resdutions were passed not to touch the article until the grievances complained of should be removed. Some years since, while, Commodore Rogers was on a cruise in the Mediterranean, in the ship of theline "North Carolina," stopping at a town on that coast, he stepped into a shoe-maker's shop, and looking around noticed a painting on a piece of glass set in a frame, representing this party of ladies in their "tea meeting;" figures of all the ladies emberance of other days, and purchased it. He brought it to Washington, and the citber, addressed a letter to the proper department at Washington asking it as a ng subsequently became broken, much to the regret of the citizens. This painting is supposed to have been made by an ing, and yet, though taken as a burlesque, ed-even the countenances of some of the verpool, 1 621 @ 1 75. ladies could be distinguished. One of the number, Mrs. Sarah Morgan, died a few years since, aged 88. This meeting is supposed to have been some months previous to the throwing the tea overboard at Boston .- Cist's Advertiser.

THE CASE OF THE DISMISSAL OF MR. JACKSON, THE BRITISH MINISTER .- The Washington Correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, publishes the following particulars of this case :

In the case of Jackson, the British Minister, who was dismissed under Mr. Madison's administration in 1809, our Government'did not submit his correspondence to the British Government, but dismissed him on receiving an offensive note, without furnishing an opportunity for the amende honorable. The course of President Taylor has been more lenient, forbearing and generous. The offence in Jackson's case was this: Erskine, who preceded him, had made an arrangement relative to the then existing difficulties between the two Governments. embracing among other things, the repeal of the British Orders in Council. The British Government undertook to disavow this arrangement, and Mr. Jackson informed Mr. Smith (then the Secretary of State) that it was void, because Erskine had no instructions from his government to make it, and that the American Government must have been aware of that fact, because it had been announced to Mr. Pinckney, our Minister in London. Secretary Smith answered that the Government had every reason to suppose Erskine was fully empowered, and had no knowledge of his want of instructions. Jackson reiterated his assertion. Smith replied that his language had become offensive, and was inadmissible, because he had before written to the British Government, disavowing the knowledge which he again charged. Jackson rejoined, professing great respective the Government, and an anxious desire to maintain friendly relations, but claiming freedom of discussion as a Minister, and again re-stating the argument from which he inferred that his Government must have had knowledge that Mr. Erskine was not instructed or empowered.-By Mr. Madison's orders, the Secretary immediately wrote to Mr. Jackson, saying that the Government would hold no farther correspondence with him, and put an end to the mission. The British Government, so far from taking offence at the course pursued forthwith issued an official recall, expressing its regret that this Government had adopted the formal diplomatic course of laying the complaint before them, to be redressed by the Government; and Mr. Foster was promptly sent to succeed Mr. Jackson, under the administration of Lord Wellesly.

Gravity of manners is thought by some to be a mark of wisdom-yet the gravest beast is an ass-the gravest bird is an the revolutionary history of the United owl-the gravest fish is an oyster-and fice.
