

POLITICAL.

LET us have done with anything published in the spirit of the late anniversary of our National Independence, which procures more of the true spirit of patriotism and love of our country than the following stanza, which was offered as a toast on that glorious occasion.—Boston Post.

God bless the good old Thirteen States;
God bless the young ones too,
Who care for rusty birth-day dates!
God bless them—old and new.

The old ones first our freedom gain'd,
In bloody fights of yore;
The young ones have their rights maintained
As the old ones did before.

Or South or North, or East or West,
Twin sisters all they be,
One mother nursed them at her breast,
And that was Liberty.

And may the wretch whose hand shall strive
To cut their vital thread,
Be scorned while in this world alive,
And scorned when he is dead.

Now fill the bowl with Nature's wine,
Let's drink "God save the King!"
The only King by right divine,
The sovereign People King.

For they're the only King I own,
All others I despise,
The King that towers above the throne,
The King that never dies.

SOLEMN SOLILOQUY OF A DEFUNCT LOAFER.

IN WHICH THERE IS MORE TRUTH THAN POETRY.

Seth Grimes and I were classmates once,
And I was rich and he was poor;
I had—alas! it was my bane!
The wealth a father laid in store.

Seth toiled at noon and noon and night,
Until his hands were hard and brown,
To pay his board and tailor's bills,
While I was lounging round the town—
But mostly in the dry goods store,
To see the pretty girls come in,
Or smoking with my jolly peers,
Who were the foils of Auld Lang Syne.

The village belle looked proud and fierce
If Seth made e'en the least advance;
And none from Tux down to a Pall,
Would be his partner at the dance.

But I, half drunk with sparkling port,
Waltzed with the fairest of the fair;
And "high born" Lucy's proud papa
Once asked what "my intentions were!"

Thus stood Seth Grimes and I at school;
And yet on exhibition day,
Although the ladies praised me much,
He, somehow, bore the prize away.

In brief—though long and weary nights
He stored his mind with knowledge rare,
And I—learned how to guzzle wine
And how to pick a good cigar.

Some three and thirty years have passed
Since we on life's great sea set sail,
And lo! the beam is sadly turned,
In fortune's strange uneven scale.

My wanted wealth has taken wings
And flown away to parts unknown;
Indeed—with sorrow be it said—
I'm on the poor-list of the town;

While Seth, who toiled to pay his way,
Until his hands were hard and brown,
Is now receiving his reward
And Senator at Washington.—(Boston Post.)

Wit in Texts.—A young preacher in the time of James I., being appointed to hold forth before the Vice Chancellor and heads of Colleges of Oxford, chose for his text—"What cannot ye wait one hour?" which carried with it a personal allusion, as the Vice Chancellor happened to be one of those heavy headed persons who cannot attend church without falling asleep. The preacher repeated his text in an emphatic manner at the end of every division of his discourse—the unfortunate Vice Chancellor was often awaked; and this happened so often, that at last every one present could very well see the joke. The Vice Chancellor was so nettled with the disturbance he had met with, that he complained to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who immediately sent for the young clergyman to reprove him for what he had done. In the course of the conference that ensued between the Archbishop and the preacher, the latter gave so many proofs of his wit and good sense, that his grace procured him the honor of preaching before the King. Here, also, he had a joke. He gave out his text in these words—"James the First and Sixth 'waver not!'" which, of course every body present saw to be a stroke at the indecipherable character of that monarch. James, equally quick-sighted, exclaimed—"He is at me already." But he was, upon the whole, so well pleased with this clerical wag, as to make him one of his chaplains in ordinary. He afterwards went to Oxford, and preached a farewell sermon on the text—"Sleep on, now, and take your rest."—Church and State Gazette.

Getting Insured.—The Troy Post relates a "good one" of Jacob Barker, the Quaker, who, hearing of the loss of one of his vessels which he had omitted to get insured, wrote to a broker with whom he had spoken on the subject as follows:

"Dear friend—If there has not filled up the policy which I bespoke on Saturday, there need not, as I have heard from the vessel."

The broker, in fact, had not filled up the policy, but presuming from the tenor of Jacob's note that his vessel was safe, and tempted by what seemed a good chance to clutch his percentage without risk, he filled it up forthwith and sent it to Jacob with the assurance that it had been made all ready for him on Saturday. On Monday morning the first thing that met his eyes on opening his newspaper, was the loss of Jacob's vessel, which he had so wickedly insured on Sunday. Then, also, he discovered the cunning ambiguity of Jacob's note—"be heard from the vessel."

Slaves running home again.—The Delaware Gazette states that the seven slaves who some time since ran away from Mr. Calvert, of Prince George's county, applied at the watch-house for lodgings, in that city, a few nights since, stating that they had been to Pennsylvania, were tired of freedom, and were trying to get back to their master. They stated that they had been deceived off by a white man, whose name they did not know, by specious promises and delusive hopes, and that they much preferred living with Mr. Calvert as his slaves, than to lead the life they did, after they reached their destination, and desired to be sent home. The mayor had them lodged in the jail at New Castle, and sent a dispatch by telegraph to their owner, who had them removed to his home.
