Morganion, Wednesday and later. And as I know our opinions are more or less inso if we see the fruit, we can guess the quality of the soil. I would not if I could, close my eyes to the fact that there are men among us born north of Mason's and Dixon's line, who are worthy of all respect. That there are such among the "Sohs" of temperance I have no doubt: but you do not see such men attempting without cause to injure the characters of their neighbors because they may differ with them in opinion, or arrogating to themselves any other standard of morals than the Bible. They know from what has been manifested in the country of their birth, that fanaticism is not to be trusted on any subject. That it is blind and undiscrimiiniting. That give it claws and teeth it soon will bite. They know that every change toward reformation in the habits of the people must be slow and gradual, and that truth (much less error) cannot be forcibly or abruptly introduced into a community without evil consequences. Whenever a Society (whether of one idea or of many) becomes a "pent up Utica" and attempts to stifle discussion by vulgar slang and pointless sarcasm, it needs no prophet to foretell in this age of the world, and in this country, that it "will be of few days and full of Sobriety says I have set up as a defender of the Church, and " he's made declarations inconsistent with the B ble." The community can judge which is the most commendable character, the defender or abuser of the Church. How can he judge as to the soundness of my interpretations, when he confesses that "he is no theologian." The world needed no confession on that subject. If he was as candid on other things the publie would not be disturbed soon, by either his bad selections or his dull originals. He talks about his illustrations. I hope his experience on banks and roads would have taught him that he has mistaken his genius. Let him follow the bent of his talents, and confine himself to asking questions. The "soil of the nursery" will better show its fertility by asking than by answering. I amight ask how I am enabled to raise my finger? And if Sobriety answered with all his " profound reasoning," it would end in "vox et pretærea nihil."

But to the counts! Did Philip S. White claim for the Order of the "Sons" equality with, or superiority to the Church? Sobriety says "my witnesses have not against loss or damage by fire. The following officers Fraley, Miss Jane S. answered to their names." Is this true? I consider have been appointed; myself fortunate not only that my witnesses are above suspicion, but that they answered promptly, not at my dent; John M. Horah, Secretary; A. H. Their voice is audible from torney, the trumpet notes of challenge to the murmerers of scorn and indignation which is heard, not only in the ranks of the Church, but in almost every social circle. I could point to the testimony of the "Sons" and their excuse, "that White was not the 'Order."
