Good in Everything .- A writer in a London paper of July, 1776, speaking to what he calls "the American standard, having a snake with thirteen rattles and the fourteenth budding," thus expatiates upon the amiable qualities of the rattlesnake. Such a benevolent philosopher would find "good in everything."

"The rattlesnake is properly the representative of America, as this animal is found in no other part of the world. The eve of this creature excels in brightness almost any other animal. She has no eyelids, and is therefore an emblem of vigilance. She never begins an attack nor never surrenders; she is therefore an emblem of magnanimity and true courage. When injured or in danger of being injured, she never wounds till she has given notice to her enemies of their danger, appeared very much at his ease and perfectly No other of her kind shows such generosity. When undisturbed, and in peace. she does not appear to be furnished with weapons of any kind. They are latent in the roof of her mouth, and even when extended for her defence, appear to those who are not acquainted with her, to be weak and contemptible; yether wounds, however anall, are decisive and fatal.-She is so hary, and associates with her hands of his mistress. On inquiry, it was askind only when it is necessary for their certained that on his way home he met some preservation. Her poison is at once the necessary means of digesting her food, his eggs in a safe place and stopped for a soand certain destruction to her enemies .- | cial chat with his friends, and finally went home The power of fascination, attributed to her by a generous construction, resemble America. Those who look steadily on ber are delighted, and involuntarily advance towards her, and, having once approached, never leave her. She is frequently found with thirteen rattles, and they increase yearly. She is beautiful in youth, and her beauty increases with her age. Her tongue is blue and forked as the lightning."+Bangor Mercury.
