its knuckles, which is covered, in front and above, with a thick, wood floating about. Only the three or four feet high, surmounted with dry upper jaw moves, which they raise almost per- branches, which it collects with great labor and precaution, so as to form a right angle with the perseverance, and also as without any apparent lower one. In the fore part of the upper jaw order; yet they are so intervened with one another, of each side, just under the nostrils, are two re- other, that it would take a bear, or wild cat, ly large, thick, strong teeth or tusks, not very sometimes to pull one of these castles to pieces, sharp, but rather the shape of a cone: these are and allow the animals sufficient time to secure as white as the finest polished ivory, and are a retreat with their young. not covered by any skin or lips, and always in the ground, and may be the greatest

the lower jaw are like opposite the water, which gives the creature a frightful ap-the necessity of the change of our policy, but is it wise to say that the great permanent interest of the State should be sacrificed in mere defer- ence to the mistaken and erroneous notions of our people on the subject of stock raising and its supposed privileges?

An application will be made to you for aid, by the State Agricultural Society. The Legis- lature has wisely contributed to the medical as- sociation and the mechanics' institute. The ba- sis of the organization of this society affords reasonable grounds to hope that it will be per- manent; and I am sure you cannot hesitate to give substantial encouragement to an interest which is the great source of our wealth, and

I recommend that the sum can be annually contributed to create

of magne-

tic

to these points are at

in connexion with

constructed, in

to my notice

and

I am

J. H. ADAMS.

NOVEMBER 27, 1855.

From the New York Evening Express.

A WISE DECISION.

We do not pretend to penetrate the motives which actuated the Boston Com- mittee who have lately extended invita- tions to sundry gentlemen—chiefly to those residing in the South—to deliver their views upon slavery, speculative and practical, by lectures in that city during the present winter. If they are in earn- est, and desire only to have the whole subject discussed in a candid spirit; if, in a community where public opin- ion almost unanimously condemns in the abstract the existence of any involuntary servitude, except for crime, they propose to the consideration of the just maxims then were

[illegible] however wrong

the practical advantage of a

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]