

Alexander Tilton, fifty years of age, very early from Cambridgeport, and a man of talents, was recently found dead in Paris, in the medical lodgings which he occupied No. 7 Rue des Vieux Augustins.

It was not until about three weeks ago that he was discovered, and it was not until about three weeks ago that he was discovered, and it was not until about three weeks ago that he was discovered.

Alexander Tilton spoke in the Congress, and was well received in many quarters. He had filled the highest post of honor, that of a member of the Senate, and he had done so with distinction.

His body was completely exhausted. He was suffering from a severe attack of fever, and he had been in bed for several weeks.

Our readers will remember to have seen, some time since, an advertisement in the Washingtonian, in which it was stated that a certain gentleman had been missing from his business.

The whole matter was laid on the table, and it was not until about three weeks ago that he was discovered, and it was not until about three weeks ago that he was discovered.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate the principal portion of the Report of the Commissioner of Patents was received. Mr. Brown reported from the Committee on District of Columbia a bill to cause the removal of obstructions in certain streets and squares of Washington.

The nomination of this gentleman for Governor, made by the Greenback Convention, without a dissenting voice, which we believe, meet the unanimous approval of the Americans of the State.

With feelings of pride and pleasure, we place the name of JOHN A. GILMER at our most loved today. It is our good fortune, as the conductor of a Press, sustaining to the best of its ability the interests of the American party.

The American of the Old North State have this liberty taken their stand, and we are rejoicing to meet you, today, the name of the gentleman who stands head and shoulders above the rest of the Whigs.
