In our advertising columns will be found the publisher's notice of a book, satitled "The Impending Crisis of the South-How to meet it:" by Hinton Rowan Helper. As the advertisement is likely to remain in the Union for the full time contracted for, and as it occupies a conspicuous place in the advertising colunns of several of our Southern contemporaries, it would be as well that the pubic should know something in relation to the character of the work and its author in advance of its purchase. Within a day or two the following facts were communicated to us by an esteemed citizen of

The real name of the author of "The Impending Crisis" is Helfer and not Help-er. Mr. Helfer is a native of Rowan county, North Carolina. Some ten years ago he took up his residence in Salisbury in that State, and there entered into a partnership with a Mr. Michael Brown in the book business. Sopu after the formation of the partnership, funds were raised, placed in Mr. Heller's hands, and he started for the city of New York for the purpose of replenishing the joint stock of books. Weeks and months flew by and not a word was heard by Mr. Brown of his partner. Finally, he received a letter from Mr. Helfer stating that he (Mr. H.) had deposited the money in bank; that he was in wretched health; and that he was about embarking for Germany, where he expected to die.

Again was Mr. Heifer missing, and again he turned up-not as a sickly bank depositor, looking torward with resignation to Germany and dead; but as a new man, with a new constitution, a new name, and in a new land. He had jour neved to California, and the result of his observations in the land of gold appeared in the form of a modest octavo, which bore, and we presume still bears, the new name of Hinton R. Helper.

This little work must have met with some success, for in two years after its publication, "The Impending Crisis" is announced. A copy of the last work is now before us, and its real character may to have been written to the order of the New York Tribune and Boston Liberator, and the birth place of the nominal

So the gate opened, and once again we exchanged our wagon for a neat bed-chambor and a regular hed, whose smooth pillows and capacious white sheets formed a cheerful contrast to the bleak beach of our mattresses. Twice we sat round the table with the Indian school and their teachers. Once more we heard that sweet singing, and knelt with them in family worship, and then, almost reluctantly and not until the morning sun was high, we turned our males' heads southard and proceeded to Kansas.

To understand the philosophy of this phenomenon, essential to the very existence of plants and animals, a few facts. derived from observation and a long train of experiments, must be remembered .-Were the atmosphere every where, at all times, at a uniform temperature, we should never have rain, hail, or snow. The water absorbed by it in evaporation from the sea and the earth's surface would descend in an imperceptible vapour, or cease to be rated. The absorbing power eir. The air near the surface of the earth is warmer than it is in the region of the clouds. The higher we ascend from the earth, the colder we find the atmosphere. Hence the perpetual snow on very high mountains in the hottest climates. Now, when from continued evaporation, the air is highly saturated with vapourthough it be invisible—if its temperature is suddenly reduced by cold currents descending from above, or rushing from a higher to a lower latitude, its capacity to retain moisture is diminished, cloud are formed, and the result is rain. Air condenses as it cools, and, like a sponge filled with water and compressed, pours out the water which its diminished capacity cannot hold.
