

Cure for Virulent Small Pox or Scarlatina and Measles.

A merchant and ship owner of this city, says the Boston Courier, has had the following recipe sent him from England, where it was furnished by Mr. L. Larkin, member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and who vouches for it as "a medicine that will effect a revolution in the healing art, as regards the prevention and cure, not only of small-pox, but also of measles and scarlatina."

"On the first appearance of fever or irritation ushering in attacks, whether occurring in families or large communities, the subjoined method of treatment should at once be entered on: Take one grain each of powdered foxglove or digitalis (valuable in the ratio of its greenness—the dark should be avoided) and one of sulphate of zinc. (This article is familiarly known as white vitriol.) These should be rubbed thoroughly in a mortar or other convenient vessel, with four or five drops of water; this done, a noggin (about four ounces) more, with some syrup of sugar, should be added. Of this mixture a table spoonful should be given to an adult, and two teaspoonful to a child, every second hour until symptoms of disease vanish.

"Thus conducted, convalescence, as if by magic, will result. The rapidity of an event so auspicious, will equally delight and astonish.—It may, however, be necessary further to note, that should the bowels become obstructed in progress of the disease, an evil by no means common, then a drachm of the compound of jalap (formed of two parts cream of tartar with one of jalap) and one grain of the herb, treated as above, formed into a pastil with syrup or sugar, should be given to an adult, and half the quantity to a child.—This simple medicine shuts out every other form or article, whatever, as totally unnecessary, if not pernicious.

"The Methodus medendi of these medicines, capable of effecting results so gigantic, remain now to be given, and appears to be as follows: The herb, by its anti febrile properties, lays hold at once of the fever, the prolific source of woe, which it immediately strangles, while the zinc acts the part of a tonic, instantly restoring the equilibrium." Mr. Larkin adds: "No emigrant or government vessel should hereafter be allowed to put to sea without a few pence worth of these protectors; and it is further ardently hoped that, as the dearest interests of common humanity are so vitally involved in this discovery, the press of all countries will give publicity to this announcement."

Serenade to, and Speech of, Mr. Vallandigham in New York.

Mr. Vallandigham, the fearless member of Congress, from Ohio, had been on a visit to New York, where he was serenaded. In responding to the calls of his friends in a speech, he said:

I accept this as a testimonial that there are those in this great metropolis of the United States who are ready, after the experiment of twenty months, to turn their hearts from bloody threats to words of compromise. [Applause.] We are looking forward now to a peaceful settlement of our difficulties; but it can only be obtained by a strict adherence to the Constitution as it was made by our fathers. By this spirit the greatest structure of modern time, this mighty temple of liberty, can be restored and maintained as it ought to be. I mean the Union as it was, the Union as our fathers made it—[loud cheers]—the Union as formed by Washington, Jefferson and Hamilton, which gave us greatness and prosperity, such as belonged to no other people since the world began. But if we talk of the Union as it was, and not as it ought to be, we are called traitors. We want no such

Union as the administration propose to give us. It is a despotism—not a Union of sovereign States, not a Union of free speech or free press, but a Union such as the Abolitionists alone would give you.

I have no hope in your executive. [Cheers.] No hope that any good can come from Abraham Lincoln or his Cabinet. [Hissses] I ask no favor of this administration. [Hissses and cries of put him out.] Your citizens have been arrested without the process of law; they have been put into prison without being told what their offence was, and all on the plea of maintaining constitutional liberty.—[Cheers.] The President has no right to make such arbitrary arrests. Let him regard the rights of his fellow citizens, who are his equals, and not his inferiors.

Our only hope, renew ourselves in the Congress of 1863. We can expect nothing from the present Congress, for it is an assemblage of men who have been repudiated at home, and who never learn anything, or the lessons of the late elections would have taught them their duties.—Were I not an American citizen and a lover of my country I should rejoice at their insane acts, for, according to the old Roman saying, "those whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." If their sincerity is any indication of their coming doom, it cannot be far off. [Applause.]

There is no salvation for the country in the present Congress. [Laughter.] I have been there, and the fact is so, I assure you. Your only redress is the polls. If these outrages had been perpetrated in England, France, Austria or Russia even they would have aroused the people to armed revolution long ago, and violence would have followed. But here in the United States the people have no necessity to spring to arms; it is through the ballot box they work their revolutions, and through the ballot box the government shall know that they are setting contrary to the people's wishes.

Senator Wilson has said in his seat in Congress that fifty arrests ought to have been made for every one that was arrested. If the Constitution is to be destroyed and trampled under foot in the manner it has been, then I think it is likely there will be fifty arrests for every one that has been arrested, and some of those arrested will be executed by the guillotine; but it will not be us. When the execution takes place it will be Cain and not Abel that will suffer the penalty.

I am for constitutional redress under the Constitution. It is our right to claim it, it is due us. The speaker then referred to the act recently passed by Congress legalizing the acts of the Government in suspending the habeas corpus, and the emancipation proclamation of the President, all of which he declared to be unconstitutional and despotic in the extreme.

Mr. Vallandigham was very severe upon the President in consequence of the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, and claimed that there was no authority for the exercise of such power in loyal States like New York, Ohio and Indiana. His attack on the administration was frequently interrupted by hisses and cries of "Put him out," but the crowd bore with the speaker very good naturedly, and cheered him loudly as he took his departure.

"Raising A Company."—It is surprising what numbers of daintily uniformed men there are in Richmond, who in response to interrogatories as to their business, reply, with a twirl of the moustache, and a look that might be supposed to win recruits—"Raising a company, sir." We know men, and could name them, who have been six months in Richmond ostensibly engaged in the laborious work of raising companies, and who in all that time have not recruited six men. Their chief business is to make daily pronouncements from the Spotswood Hotel to Fourteenth street and back again, which exhausts them. About the only "raising" they attended to is raising half filled tumblers from back room tables and maneuvering to "raise the wind" occasionally as pay day comes around.

Surprisingly delightful to serve one's country in this way. No dangers, no privations; the Spotswood gong is their reveille; hot rolls, beef-steak, butter and mocha their rations.

Happy fellows, those who are engaged in "Raising a Company."—Richmond Ex.
