Miscellaneous.

THE NEW YEAR'S DAY.
The New Year's day! in many a change.
Tis still kept sacred and apart;
And time can never quite estrange,
Its young emotions from the heart;
There's joy within its circle yet,
There's hope within its rising ray,
The heart can never quite forget
The ancient brightness of the day.
The young behold the tide of time
In glorious fulness sweeping past,
And many a glance of joy sublime
Upon its bounding waves is cast;
They spread their canvass on the sea,
They care not how the gale may blow,
And move in rapture, wild and free
As it there were no graves below.
The man, with calm and quiet smile,
Regards his children at their play,
Unbends his heart & feels the while,
The influence of the new year's day.
He counts the labors of his life,
And says with sorrow, all is vain;
Yet, ere he rests him from the strife,
He hurries to the field again.
The aged, on whose snowy brow
The storms of many a year have beat,
Sees waves of memory rolling now
Indy whispers to his feet;
With heart sustained by thoughts of power—
With gentle firmness in his eye
He waits the coming of the hour,
That bears the last command—to die.
For he whose thoughts have learned to rise
On strong devotion's upward wing,
Sees, far beyond these lower skies,
Another new year's day break spring—
A year, that hath no closing day,
A year, that knows no wintry gloom—
A year, whose earliest morning ray Breaks from the midnight of the tomb.
Then let the tide of time roll on;
For who would stay its downward flow!
Religion's undescending sun
Still sheds its holy light below.
Not vainly to the hearts of men
Is that inspiring promise given,
The lost shall all be found again,
And death conduct to life & heaven.
