TO A LADY.

By the crimson hues of a fair subset, By the skies all darkly blue; I love, I love but you.

By the clustering stars so sparkling bright, In you clouds of dusky hue; By the pale rays of the moon's clear light, I love, I love but you.

By the birds that sing so merrily, In graves remote from view; By the leaves that fall from the forest tree. I love, I love but you.

By the cold chilling winds that blow so keen, Midst full and winter cold skies bright blue, By the frast so white on grass and tree, I love, I love but you.

By the yellow leaves that strew the plain, By the flowers that will bloom anew; When the gentle spring resumes her reign, I love, I love but you.

And though I sink in pale decay, And memory proves untrue; By the white foam that tops the spray, I love, I love but you.
