"THE SENTIMENTAL." No. 2. I want a wife.

I want a wife both young and "sound Of lith and limb" and min l; Let no bad traits in her be found, Where can I one such find? I do not want her to rab snuff, Nor paint her cherk —I don't I do despise such foolish stuff, It always did me front. Nor do I want her for to lace So tight she can't fetch breath; Nor wear deception on her face, Not dress herself to death. I want her for to "plumb the track," Decent, modest, merry; To wear no hump upon her back, Like a dromedary. I never want her go to balls, Nor spress of any sort; To keep within her hoshand's walls, Should be a lany's fact. I want her be a 'roat'ral gal,'' Clear of foolish fashions; And also like my sister Sal. Always "kerb" her passions. If I should sold and curse about, She mus nt be peltish too; But always say my ducling Stout Do "kerh" your passions, do. I never want her for to scald, Not fret in any case; But when I curse, her tongue should hold With smiles upon her faces Such is the gal I'd like to house, Just for a partner dear; To be my meek and humble spouse, Many, many a year. I'm hands one as a man can be, Well form'd, with manly face; I'm young, I'm only forty-three, The smartest of my race. My height is five feet eight or nine, Nor a baby at that; With whishers long, and black and fine, And checks all plump and fat; I smoke segues and drink my wine, Like all the gentiles do; And once or twice I've "cut a shine" Among the ladies too. But never did I court,-not one I'd have that would say "yes;" They'd laugh and say, "you're making fun," And eye my homespun deess, I want a good wife, and I hope My beinty will suffice To draw one to me like a rope, All lovely in my eyes. Just such a one as I've portray'd, In this love epistle, With cush to set me up in trade,
