Dr. Talmage said that different na ions have different styles of salutation, and after describing the modes of meeting, ancient and modern, of many nations he said that his text was the salutation of a wealty em ployer to his hard-working employes. Boaz had come from Bethlehem to see his employes, and he greefed them with courtesy, kindness and sympathy. Kindness calls outkind ness, and the salutation of the good hearted man of wealth evoked a blessing from his employes. Would that the case of Boaz could be typical the relations between employers and employes nowadays. But the whole tendency of things in our day is to make the chasm between employer and employed wider and wider. Time was when the clerk boarded with his employer and a kindly interest was manifested in his welfare, But the bridge of sympathy has been broken down at both ends, and the tendency now is to make the employe Craik, Geo.
