Andree and His Companions.

There is no longer any hope of Andree's return. Scientific men in this country and experienced ice pilots and whalers all agree that he could not have survived three months. They place no faith in any of the messages and signs alleged to have come from him. It was just four years ago this very day, July 11, 1897, one clear afternoon, when the wind was in the right quarter, that Andree summoned his companions without ceremony, cut the ropes that detained his aerial carriages and soared away into the Arctic sky. Whatever may be thought about the prudence and scientific practicability of a voyage to the North Pole in a balloon, there was never a doubt, indifference to danger and death, as that given by the young Swede and his devoted companions, Fraenkel and Strindberg. Having convinced himself and them that there is a steady current of air like the trade winds of the tropics, from the boundaries of the Arctic Circle to the pole, they staked their lives on their faith, built a balloon and attempted to make the voyage.

It must have been a remarkable scene when they departed. Andree had waited for favorable weather nearly two weeks after his arrangements were complete, and was becoming very impatient, when, as he came from dinner on the afternoon of the 11th of July, he noticed with gratification that all the conditions were favorable. He hastily called his assistants, who made rapid preparations for departure. Within half an hour everything was ready. Andree shook hands with all the bystanders in a most solemn manner, thanked them in a few hearty words for their interest and assistance, stepped coolly into his car, called Fraenkel and Strindberg, who were saying good-by to their friends and cut the ropes with his own hands. As the last cord was severed and the balloon rose heavenward, he leaned over the edge of the car and shouted: "Greetings at home to Sweden."

The three aeronauts waved their caps until they disappeared into an unknown world where the north wind comes from.

The scaffolding built for Andree's balloon and the cabins he used for his workshops still stand on the edge of the ford awaiting the disposition of their absent owner—a melancholy reminder which appeals to the sentiment of the Norwegians who will allow them always to stand as a monument to Andree, Fraenkel and Strindberg.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Girls of Holland.

In Holland, the mass of every class go to public schools and all mix together. Education begins at 6 years of age in the public schools, and at 12 a girl is examined and passes on for a five years' course in the higher burgher schools, of which Holland possesses seventy-two. The coeducation of the sexes is an admitted principle. In the primary schools boys and girls are brought up together, they learn side by side, and are on familiar terms from early childhood without the smallest ill resulting. A great point is made of languages, and no Dutch girl of the upper or middle classes is considered educated who cannot speak English, French and German more or less fluently.

Probably owing to the system of education in force, the womenfolk are inclined to grow up somewhat independent; we are told that the prejudice against women working for a livelihood has almost disappeared, and even rich women sometimes choose a profession. They include doctors, dentists, many of them first-rate, photographers, and gardeners. About 1,000 girls hold posts as assistant chemists, some 3,000 are nurses, trained in the White Cross Homes, and on par with the very best of their profession. A woman is curator of the Natural History Museum in Haarlem, and other holds the same post at Utrecht, while a third is head dispenser at a hospital in Amsterdam. The railway, post and telegraph offices are largely served by female clerks, who altogether outnumber the males.

Girls in Holland have a great deal of liberty. They may call, shop and go to parties at the houses of friends without a chaperon, walk and travel alone, cycle, and enjoy their fun and freedom, and are in no hurry to find husbands. Marriages are not arranged, and the parents' consent is only asked after a proposal is made and accepted.—The Humanitarian.

The Pastor's Dilemma: Umbrella.

The dignity of a certain Sunday school picnic was demoralized the other day before the scholars and teachers were well out of town. It was arranged that the majority of the scholars should go to the grove on a trolley car, and that the pastor of the flock, several teachers and the baskets should follow in a wagon hired for the occasion.

This suggestion was followed out, and the procession started auspiciously. The wagon was in front, and as the trolley car passed it the pupils of the Sunday school saw that that made them fear to look again. Their pastor was sitting on the seat beside the driver, his broad-brimmed hat on his knee, his hand on the support of a gaudy, yellow umbrella that shaded the seat, and on the seat beside him sat a young man who was looking at the pastor with a look of intense interest.

Drink Firewood Whiskey?

It was too late for the scandalized pupils to expostulate. They were whisked by in short order, and so it was not until he reached the picnic grounds that the good man knew what strange device the banner bore which he had upheld for five miles.

When the party returned the sun was still in the heavens, but the umbrella was furlled and carefully tucked under the seat to prevent a scandal.—Baltimore News.

Then and Now.

The good old times we hear so much about were all right in their way, but the present time is better a hundred fold than they. It is a great deal easier to make money now than it was then and the average man handles ten dollars to his father's one. The modern comforts and luxuries of life were unknown in the "good old times."

The parlor car glides through the country at fifty miles an hour where the old stage used to rock along at five. Everything else is proportionately more convenient and comfortable. But with all these blessings there is something the matter with us. We are not content and happy, and in our blue moments, we are disposed to lay the blame on the times, and sigh for the good old days when everybody had plenty of money and went on their way rejoicing.

Palestine's Mineral Wealth.

The Department of State has received from Ernest L. Harris, Consular Agent at Elbenstock, a report on the mineral treasures of Palestine. The report says: "The newly discovered mineral deposits lie on both sides of the Jordan and the Dead Sea. The salt deposits of the Dead Sea could be developed into an industry. The most important of all the deposits is phosphate. At present the phosphate mines of Florida almost supply the world's demand. The immense fields of phosphate to the east and west of the Jordan need only better means of traffic and communication in order to insure development. This, it would seem, is not far distant, as the Turkish Government is planning a continuation of the Yafa-Jerusalem railroad and steamboats are already plying the Dead Sea."

The Man Without a Stomach.

Will the stomach become a supplementary organ, lagging superfluous, when the human machine is trimmed and braced for the fiercest competitions that must come when the world is overpopled? Look at Mr. Karl Kruger, gardener in Chicago. Last spring he was starving to death with cancer of the stomach. April 20 the surgeons took out his stomach in exactly eighty minutes. For some time, naturally, he mortified his flesh. He lived on prepared food, a cheap diet, if not a general one. The makers were only too glad to purvey for such a patient. "Why, our food is so healthy and nourishing that a man need not eat any more."

And the man did thrive. He is thriving still. He doesn't miss his stomach, and he doesn't miss a meal. He has passed beyond the patent-food stage. He has coffee and white bread and butter for breakfast; the same for dinner like it, and tea, white bread, and butter and potatoes for supper. He sleeps like a top; "like a rock," he says. Necessarily he is free from horrible fevered dreams, those children of indigestion and over feeding. He falls asleep as soon as he lies down. For him no mnemonic drill, no vain attempts to keep his mind from dwelling on the fact that he has one, no crazy efforts at "relaxation." The sleep of the stomachless is sweet.

Nor do such longings as are said to possess the wooden-legged men come to him. He doesn't mourn the loss of his digestion-sac. "I simply eat and that is all there is to it," he says; "I cannot tell whether I have a stomach or not." O three fortunate, three thousand times fortunate Karl Kruger, healthiest of men! Worthy of all the wealth which the dime museum men are eager to bestow upon him.

Emblems on Summer Girls' Arms.

The seashore summer girl has struck a wholly new fad, but where it originated no one seems to know. One of the charms appeared on the beach at Atlantic City the other day with her favorite college design apparently tattooed in white on her sunbrowned arm. There was the flag of the University of Pennsylvania with the letters "U. P." and beneath this a little heart. The thing caused a deal of speculation for a long time, but the fair seamer could not keep the secret, and a local her charms copied the design, now threatens to spread all along the coast.

"How is it done?" asked the fair one in reply to a question. "That is easy. Before I exposed my arm to the fierce rays of the sun I cut out the design I wished from adhesive plaster, and stuck it fast to my arm. When the tanning process was well along I took off the plaster, and there was the flag in white just as if it were my own."

For the first summer in the memory of the oldest inhabitant there has been no gambling at Long Branch this year. Every one of the half dozen or so gambling houses, as the gambling places are politely called, is bolted and barred, the chains are up at the gates and the grass is growing knee deep where flower gardens have been accustomed to bloom.

Court Language in the Philippines.

The cable announces that the Philippine Commission has decided in favor of the use of the Spanish language in the courts for the next five years, provided that an oral argument may be presented in English and interpreted, or an English brief may be submitted if accompanied by a Spanish translation; and, by consent of the court and of all the parties in any particular case, English may be substituted for Spanish, but in such cases the official records shall still be in Spanish. The language of the courts would drive out of the practice of their profession the Filipino lawyers. It has been suggested that the mere inconvenience or injury to a comparatively small class of men ought not to weigh against the public good. Perhaps this is so, if the public good absolutely and necessarily requires it. But, in weighing reasons, the injury to the Filipino lawyer is certainly not to be considered. The lawyer of a community are always influential; they are always able to make themselves heard. On mere grounds of public policy, when we are attempting to convince the Filipino people of our sincerity of effort to create a government for their benefit, we ought not to alienate a class of men who do so much to initiate and formulate public opinion as exists in the islands. With deference to the memorialists of the American bar, I differ utterly from their conclusion that there is any antagonism between the Filipino lawyers, or the educated classes, and the masses. Deeply as the masses felt upon some features of the Spanish regime, it seems to me clear that there would have been no public expression of their feelings, and no revolution, had it not been for the educated class of the Philippines. It was their guidance, their bravery, and their sacrifices of life and property which developed the silent protest of the people into forcible resistance. It seems to me to be blind to the most evident feature of the situation here not to see that the masses of the people are largely controlled by the educated classes.—Indeed, I think too much so.

System Smiles.

"Well—I suppose she's long and lithe, just the same as ever." "Is she?" "Not at all. You know she recently came into a fine new dress. She's 'divinely tall' now."

Books are light-houses erected by the great sea of time.—R. P. Whipple.

"I had a good job on hand last night," said the first burglar, "but I was stopped by an open-faced watch." "Get out!" "Fact. It was a bulldog in the yard."

There are few with lessens more to be dread of than a talking man having nothing to say.—Swift.

He—"Some doctors say kissing is dangerous." She—"Well, it does seem to affect my appetite."

The mind of the bigot is like the pupil of the eye; the more light you pour upon it, the more it will contract.—O. W. Holmes.

He boasts he is a self-made man, whereas he's most comported. He must have gone on strike before the job was quite completed.

"There is no doubt that this scheme will pay," said the promoter.

"Yes," answered the purchaser of stock. "I suppose so. But who is to get the money?"—Washington Star.

There is an interesting side to the escape in San Francisco of Lady Francis Hope (May Yoke) and Major Putnam Bradley Strong and their subsequent departure together on the Nipper, of the Orient Line. It is stated that the Duke of Newcastle paid Lady Hope £10,000 for the release from all further association with her of his brother, Lord Francis Hope. It is believed that no attempt was made by Lord Hope to secure a divorce, and that even if there were, it would not be successful because of his lordship's own indiscretions.

It is said that only two women in the United States may use the words "I am rich" with impunity. Julia D. Grant and Mrs. A. J. A. Garfield. A frank letter goes through the mail without postage, bearing their signature, either stamped or written upon the envelope.

Emma Calve said in a recent interview in Paris that she had only one ambition, and that was to become an actress. "I have made a success as a grand opera singer," she is reported as saying. "I am rich, too. But what I now want to be able to do is to move people by acting as I have already done by my singing."

In March, 1900, there were in use in the British navy in South African waters five installations of Marconi's system. The Admiralty were apparently well satisfied with its working, since in May of last year they decided to extend its adoption to 32 more ships and land stations.
