Meaning of Cotton Figures

In our last issue we stated that the number of bales ginned to Nov. 14th, 8,531,000 seemed to be bearish. In one sense it does, being s million more than had been ginned than the corresponding up to Nov. 14th last year. The amount reported for the previous speculators in New York took a different view on the "first blush," than those of operation aggregated regarding them neither bullish nor bearish. However if we analyze them we can better see why they did not regard the ginners' report as bearish to say the least. From what can be learned he seems to have been wholly at fault. The Kinston shoofly, which killed had blown for the crossing and the bell was being sounded.

The engineer, Mr. Taylor says that he saw him on the track, when it was too late to stop, though he at once applied the emergency brakes and brought the train to a stop in 100 yard.

But Lovett had failed to clear the track, so he was struck and knocked down, dying almost instantly. His right arm and right leg were fractured and he was struck on the head. The skull was not crushed but it was this that probably caused death.
