Character and Life. Life would be easier if we would grasp the great truth that it is a long education, and that character, victory organized into moral purpose and habit, is its end. Happiness comeg by the way to those whose hearts are set to do right; pleasure lies often in the path, but the business of life is getting strong. They only who are strong are fit for happiness as a permanent and continuing condition, and life is a preparation for happiness rather than a time and place for happiness. Pleasure without moral vigor and sanity be comes corruption; and life is a train ing which will make pleasure a beau tiful companion and not a temptress. Leisure is a golden opportunity for those who work and grow by virtue of inward strength and self-direction; and life is a training for the blessedness of infinite leisure. Completion and beauty of companionship come to those whose hearts are at one in the pursuit of the noblest things; and life is an education for eigenal friendship. The bliss of love is for those only who can lose themselves in one another; and life is an education in that unselfishness which, like
