“Loveliest Gardens in America” Are Found in Tryon Says Writer

We are indebted to Mrs. Dyer for this little sketch about Tryon in the Washington Post. In writing about Miss Frances Benjamin Johnston, an artist with the camera, the Post author says: “She has photographed gardens in Charleston, S. C., Rome, Italy, and Tryon, N.C. Now don't laugh at Tryon, N.C., for you probably never heard of it. It is in the mountains near Asheville, inhabited by a colony of artists. Sidney Lanier lived and wrote some of his immortal verse there. William Gillette retired there to mourn his lost Lenore. And there one finds the loveliest gardens in America. Winter and summer the temperature does not vary greatly, and until Mr. Volstead went on his wicked worst, a colony of Swiss and German vineyardists there grew the finest grapes and made the best wine in the world.” I had to put that in, for I know a grand opera singer there and a famous writer and a lady, Mrs. Mary Phifer, who writes about gardens for garden magazines with the same exquisite touch that Miss Johnston “mugs” em. All the artists in the world do not live in Georgetown, nor in Provincetown.

Cost of Education Justified

Capt. B.L. Smith of Shelby, speaking before the County teachers at their meeting in Mill Spring today stated the cost of education was justified. It increases earning power, and buying demand, decreases waste, and war, promotes peace, better health, savings account, and appreciation of the finer things in life.
