Henry

Henry D. Shankle, Jr., reports that he reached St. Louis, Mo. on Wednesday and the old model-T was still hitting on all four. The first night on the road in Kentucky, he picked up a blackberry picker, who reciprocated and gave Henry a night's lodging and breakfast.

A Day In The Bulletin Office

The morning mail assorted. Most of it went in the waste basket. All the colleges, welfare associations, political organizations, manufacturer's associations and others offered enough material to fill the entire newspaper.

Seven big daily newspapers scanned for headlines and articles referring to this section.

Telephone rings. "Here's a news item for you."

A customer walks in. "I want to put an ad in your paper."

Printer's voice from the composing room, "How do you divide father, fat-her or father?"

R-i-n-g! r-i-n-g! "Give me St. Luke's Hospital, Central, please. Any news for the paper today?" "Nothing today."

But the editor has information from other sources that several new patients have arrived at the hospital. An illegitimate baby, a man sobering up from a drunken spree, several recovering from injuries received in pistol or knife wounds, some just resting from nervous strain.

R-i-n-g! "210, please." "Any new meters put in today?" Name and address of newcomer received.

Woman walks in. "Why didn't you print that news item I sent you by my little girl?" What news item? "The one about me having a cow to sell." "Lady that was no news item. That was an advertisement." "Do you charge for that?"

Negro man comes in. "My mother died last night and I want to let the folks know the funeral will be Sunday afternoon. How much will it cost me?" That's
