Chamber Commerce Meets on Wednesday

President S. T. Wood announces that the Tryon Chamber of Commerce will hold its annual meeting on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock at Missildine's Hall. Reports of the year's work will be given and all citizens interested in the future of Tryon are urged to attend this meeting as matters of importance will be discussed.

For Polk County Fishermen Only

Warden Burton Williams states that he had orders from headquarters to announce that fishing without license in waters below Highway No. 19 in Polk county is for Polk county people only, and people in other counties and out of the state must pay the regular fees.

Kiwanis Tuesday

The Tryon Kiwanis club will meet on Tuesday at 1 p. m., at Edgewood Inn with R. L. McNeely in charge of the program. Mr. McNeely yielded his program last week to John Randolph of Virginia who spoke on the advantages of a Savings and Loan bank for Tryon.

The last writing of Mrs. Peattie was found among her things last week and forwarded to The Bulletin by her son, Dr. Roderick Peattie. It is published on another page in this issue. Many Tryonites will treasure it as her last literary work and, too, because it is a picture of her interesting garden at Dunwaderin in Tryon.

ETAOIN

No doubt many readers of newspapers have wondered why they often see a mixed up line of type that always reads etaoin shrdlu cmfwyp. There isn't much news today so we'll tell you about that. When the printer makes a mistake on the linotype machine and realizes it before the line is finished it is quicker for him to fill up the line by running his fingers down the keyboard and striking all letters in rapid succession and cast that line and start over, than it is to correct the line in error. The letters on a linotype machine run downward—etaoin shrdlu cmfwyp just as those on a typewriter run across—qwertyuiop asdfghjkl, etc. The operator depends on the proof-reader and the make-up man to keep the line out of the paper. The next time you see one just remember that they overlooked it. The operator was on vacation last week and the editor substituted. The linotype keyboard is barely touched as you would a hot iron, so after a week fingering with shrdlu and cmfwyp on a light touch, typewriting seemed odd pounding asdfghjkl zxevbnm. A printer-editor has to keep the alphabet in mind in four arrangements for when he goes to the hand cases the letters run jbedekisfglmnhoypw, etc., and the hand letters are all upside down. So you see there is no wonder newspapers make errors sometimes.

Henry

Card from Henry Shankle, Jr., states that he had reached Topeka, Kansas, on Thursday. Car O. K.
