FILLERS

The New York Sun had a long story and picture in Tuesday's issue about William Gillette's return to the stage. It is the first time in the history of American theatricals that an 80-year-old actor has come from retirement. He made his first appearance, since retirement, on Monday night in Newark. The Sun says:

"Mr. Gillette isn't yet sure of himself in this new assignment; last night, for all concerned, was more or less of a dress rehearsal. But the celebrated creator of Sherlock Holmes retains his knack of holding an audience's attention every instant he is upon the stage; he displays astonishing agility for a man of 80 and he still speaks in that high, dry, crispy, penetrating Gillette voice.

"Mr. Gillette made a curtain speech at the close of the play and was given an ovation. He received many telegrams and a swarm of admirers went back stage to extend congratulations in person. "Three Wise Fools" will be in Newark all week. Then to Washington and Philadelphia. Newark, hardly selected for sentimental reasons, paid $23,000 for a week of this actor in "Sherlock Holmes". House Manager Smith of the Shubert said last night that there should be some packed houses before the end of the week. John Golden was not present last night. He had planned to come, it seems, but Mr. Gillette made a special trip to the Golden offices to make the suggestion that the producer wait until the middle of the week. During the Newark engagement Mr. Gillette is denying himself to
