FILLERS

An error was made in Monday's Bulletin when we stated that Dr. Edwin Barlow Evans would lecture at the Lanier Library on the 25th. It is to be the 23, Thursday. He will speak on the "Laws of Life in Literature." The price for the lecture is 25c and the excess above expenses will go toward helping the library.

But,—There will be something else at the Library on the 25th. Dr. Edward Gwathmey of Converse college will lecture on "Poe and His Raven" This party will cost 50c, but the price will include the tea to be served previously. A good time to entertain your friends and chat awhile with visitors before the converse man starts raven about the poe man and his bird.

King George V. of England is no more. His voice on the raudo Christmas morning was an inspiration to his subjects throughout the world, and millions in this country learned to admire him for his ideals, his loyalty to his sense of duty and for the fellowship he felt for all peoples. He did not want to be king, but he made the best of it nobly.

Robert E. Lee, whose birthday was celebrated Monday in the South, was another example of sacrifice to duty. He gave up wealth, and military honors in his devotion to duty which he said no man could do more and none should do less. He was as great in defeat as in victory. He was a Kipling "IF" man. Prosperity and honors did not spoil him. And when he lost he started all over again with worn out tools—to build character in the manhood of the world.

Another Kipling "IF" man was Abe Lincoln who was reared in poverty and rose to great heights. It did not turn his head. Neither foes nor loving friends could hurt him, and he treated success and failure just the same. His devotion to his sense of duty and his love for humanity was supreme. He could keep his head when all about him were losing theirs and blaming it on him.

Franklin, whose birthday was observed last Friday was another Kipling "IF" man. He moved many obstacles from his path to success.
