

The Tryon Daily Bulletin

ol. 9, Est. 1-31-28. TRYON, N.C. FRIDAY, FEB. 28, 1936

Tryon Written Up In "Motor Sparks"

By JOHN JENKINS

In Chicago Daily News

Charlotte, N. C., Feb. 19.—It's all true, this tale about privileged communities which bask in gentle weather while the world around them shivers and battles snow drifts or bakes and suffers sun-stroke. Tryon, North Carolina, nestled in the base of a rocky fir-clad chimney, aired by a winding canyon and indifferent to blizzards, is one of several serene little havens to be found in the southern Smokies. They're called "thermo belts."

Dropping down on it yesterday afternoon to prospect new routes for Chicago trail hitters, we found it busy with the outdoor activities it pursues the year round, but astonished and resentful over the few flakes of snow that had fallen out of the record national blanket and trying to recall any year since 1918 when this phenomenon had occurred. January jasmine was flowering brilliantly in terrace gardens. Saddle horses were stamping impatiently at old-fashioned hitching posts, and a roaring pine-log fire was flickering over the homey walls of the Oak Hall hotel dining room.

30 Degrees Warmer

"We've just got around to admitting that the white stuff you see here and there in the canyon might be snow," Charlie Lynch, Tryon host and mountain authority, remarked over the hot biscuits and honey. "They hold me sort of responsible for our temperature

—Continued on Back Page—

Frank D. Moore In Play Here Tuesday

The subscribers and friends of the Drama Fortnightly are to have the privilege of seeing the Palmetto Players, under the direction of Miss Hazel Abbott, head of the Department of Dramatics of Converse college.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Frank Moore, who has a prominent part in the play, these players are presenting J. B. Priestly's "Dangerous Corners" on Tuesday evening, March 3rd, at 8 o'clock at the Parish House. Tryon is well acquainted with Mr. Moore, who took such an active interest in the Drama Fortnightly for a number of years and proved himself an able actor and director, and will be pleased to have the opportunity of seeing him again.

Season tickets are good for this entertainment. Inasmuch as there is to be but one performance, season ticket holders will have first choice of seats up to 7:50 p. m. Admission will be 50c for non-ticket holders.

"Dangerous Corners", the play to be presented at the Parish House on Tuesday night will be given tonight at 8:30 at the Converse college Little Chapel in Spartanburg. Since the play is a social drama the audience will be invited to join in a social cup of coffee in the lobby during the intermission between first and second acts.

"Sandbad, the Sailor", a colored cartoon and Hearst Metrotone News will be the shorts at Tryon's Theatre tonight.