

LONDON LETTER, NO. 5

thing of it, I am sure there is a moral adorning this tale.

Flat racing has begun. The Lincolnshire is tomorrow. On Friday, however, there is that greatest of all steeplechases, the Grand National. Miss Dorothy Page's Golden Miller, trained by O. Anthony, is the favourite at 11 to 2.

The Ideal Home Exhibition was opened at Olympia today. One of the many attractions is a reproduction of Mae West's bedroom! Along side of it is a monk's cell! Who says we have no sense of humour?

Elizabeth Bergner has been operated upon for appendicitis, and Sir James Barrie's eagerly awaited play has had to be postponed. It was due to open in Manchester a week or two ago, and heavy losses have been incurred.

The season has started. Debutantes of every size, shape, and colour are now hurling themselves round and round each other's ballrooms, while their mothers, resplendant in black satin, sit praying by the band, or else eat seven suppers in swift succession to charm away the interminable night hours. They have four months of this ahead of them, with a short breathing space at Easter!

It's a great life if you don't weaken, isn't it?

Yrs Sincerely

Virginia Graham.
