Men Rescued From Mine Early Today

The two men who have been imprisoned in a Nova Scotia mine for ten days as the result of a cave-in, were rescued about 12 o'clock last night. They were very weak from Hunger and exposure. The radio has been keeping the world informed of progress of the rescue parties made up of doctors, government officials and miners. Every effort possible was made to save the men. A third man died after a week in the mine.

The men were placed on stretchers, and rushed to an emergency hospital. They were very brave and cheerful despite suffering.

NEWSPAPERING IN HEAVEN

*By Noah Hollowell

Sam Wood, who retired from newspapering in Tryon a few years ago but who had been itching more to get back in the game than he scratched to get out (as is the case with most of them), died in Tryon last Friday. Sam left us with one appointment unfulfilled. He was to tell the weekly publishers of Western Carolina Saturday night how he would publish a newspaper if he were back in the game, into which he hoped to land eventually.

"Sam's going while in the prime of manhood has deeply impressed me. I was looking forward to hearing his speech with keen interest.

"A whole lot less is known about heaven than has been said and written about it. Who knows but that at the time he was scheduled to be telling the boys about the "ideal" newspaper he dreamed of in this troubled world, he will be consulting with a heavenly editor-in-chief or managing-editor about some journal "over there."

"If any of us happen to get to heaven and we go with the least trace of our natures here, what newspaper man would be content without the flash of headlines? And who wouldn't like to report on the comings and goings of the heavenly subjects, the colorings of their wings, the tone of their harps and the following of their hbbbies—all the sweets of mundane life with none of the bitters, such as meeting Saturday's payroll, paper bills, and the like? If
