Slack's Pharmacy—The Service Drug Store

Dallas, Texas, June 23.—Parking prices hit a low level this week about the Texas Centennial Exposition grounds as rates dropped to 15 and 20 cents. Lot owners, who at the outset of the Exposition asked a half dollar, brought out red painted signs and went to hawking for cars on a 15 cent rate.

Donald C. Peattie, writing interestingly in the magazine TODAY, has found that every day in the year there are no less than 44,000 thunderstorms and that, at any moment, one could see going on in the world at the same time at least 2,000 of such storms, provided, of course, there was a conceivable point of vantage.

In spite of the apparent harmlessness of these natural electric explosions that are so commonly occurring, it would be foolish to tempt them to show their capacity for fatality by standing under a tree or sitting in a drought or answering a country telephone while such lightning storms are raging.—Charlotte Observer.
