affection and they are all right when used by admirers but they are not so hot when the general public makes use of them. Lefty Flynn, Babe Ruth, Pepper Martin, Connie Mack, and other notables are exceptions because they are public men and people don't say Mr. Martin or Mr. Ruth any more than they do Mr. George Washington or Mr. Benjamin Franklin, etc. As proof that nick names are products of love and affection just drop the "dear", "honey" or whatever the average husband and wife call each other and substitute their proper names and see how cold they feel toward each other when the man calls his wife "Mrs. Jones" and she calls him "Mr. Jones" and both are very polite and formal. A minister's wife once told me that when her husband was peeved at her he would be extremely polite and answer, "yes, madam," or "No madam," and the politeness would only serve to make her angry. It isn't what you say that counts, but how you say it. One little boy said his teacher loved him the best because she called him her angel, but another little boy said his teacher loved him better than that because she called him her little devil.
