JOHN WASHBURN WRITES

John L. Washburn writes from Duluth, Minn.: "Forest fires are bad all around us. The air is heavy with smoke and the sun is red. Small armies of forest rangers, C. C. C. boys, volunteer fire-fighters and some conscripted ones are working hard to keep the fires under control. Many farms have been destroyed. Some farmers saved their household goods by piling them in the middle of alfalfa fields. Alfalfa roots go deeper so the drought has not killed the growth as it has other feeds. The alfalfa therefore was green and did not burn.
