

Curiosity Kills Cat

A farm hand in Wodly, Ga., recently killed a rattlesnake in his yard and buried it in the sand. A few moments later a cat came along and began digging it up. The jaws of the dead snake clamped on the cat's paw. The animal leaped into the air and was dead in a few minutes.—“The Pioneer.”

Saul White, fishing off Long Branch on July 12, had just hooked a bluefish when an eight-foot shark leaped for it, missed and landed, sprang in Mr. White's 22 foot boat. “It looked like a torpedo and it swished like a whale.” said Mr. White. He had no weapons to subdue it so he waited prayerfully atop the engine house while it thrashed about, smashing the pump and timbers and threatening to wreck the ship. Finally it battered itself into unconsciousness and Mr. White put for shore with a tale he'll tell but nobody will believe.—Ex.

Raleigh.—A city school board edict today outlawed smoking in Raleigh high schools.

Superintendent Claude F. Gaddy said, before the action was taken, at least one principal had set aside smoking rooms for boys and girls.
