

The Tryon Daily Bulletin

(The Smallest Daily Newspaper In The World)

Vol. 9, Est. 1-31-28 TRYON, N. C., FRIDAY, NOV. 13, 1936

A FILLER

As a newspaper man the editor of The Bulletin was very much interested in the subject to be discussed at the Rotary club today noon. The subject, "Planned Economy" was brought up for discussion by Attorney M. R. McCown, who asked if there wasn't some way to raise money in one big campaign and distribute it to the various civic and charitable organizations more economically than by having so many drives and giving haphazard relief. I don't know how the discussion came out today but I was interested for there ran through my mind some of the many activities The Bulletin and The Polk County News are called on to support either financially or through publicity which after all is money in terms of payroll, paper and time for the editor.

There is no question but that a central organization operated by an efficient staff could do the work more economically and better than various amateurs with big hearts but unskilled in social service management.

I believe Tryon business men or their families are called on to support more worthwhile activities than any town this size in the world, and very often a person contributing to six worthwhile things that he is interested in will criticize another for not donating to his pet projects when he himself does not help the other fellow out who is probably supporting 12 other activities just as worthy. Besides the various private charities the local business people and

Important Football Game Friday, 20th

On Friday, November 20, the Tryon-Saluda team will entertain Mars Hill in a game which will determine the championship of the Blue Ridge Conference. Mars Hill defeated Waynesville yesterday 2-0 by the slim margin of a safety. The local team will need all possible support to defeat this powerful squad. All the boys are in good condition and will give their best.

Armistice Day Speaker

In an Armistice program at Hendersonville on Nov. 11, the Rev. J. Sprole Lyons of Landrum was the chief speaker. An extract from the Hendersonville Times-News says:

Mr. Lyons spoke on 'Americanism and Pacifism.' He defined Americanism as the translation into daily living of the principles for which our forefathers left their former homes to establish a new nation in America.

He spoke of the reasons for the establishment of America and declared that three wars, the Revolution, War Between the States and the World War had been fought for the preservation of these ideals.

"The only justification for the cost in money, lives, and blood is the preservation of those ideals, he said.

"The menace of the ideals opposed to Americanism is present today, he continued, and he urged preparedness as the surest means of preserving the American system."
