

FRIGIDAIRE Is Always At The Top

Our London Letter

of the Queen's Hall is robbed of its seats, and hundreds and hundreds of people stand, squashed like sardines, for hours at a time, listening to their favourite composer's works. It is really a sight to see. They pay two shillings to get in, and they are allowed to smoke, and, of course, to faint!

There is quite a rush of Autumn plays, and about time too. John Gielgud is acting in Richard II, which had such a success with Maurice Evans in New York, and even I, who have not the proper reverence for Shakespeare, think it perfectly wonderful.

People are just returning from their holidays, and are feeling a little bored at the thought of settling back into the old routine and a little flat, and a little depressed. We open our papers and see that a new block of apartments has built a bomb proof shelter in the basement, that a girl has drunk a lot of poison because she loves Jack Doyle, that Hitler is a mild vegetarian really, that orang-outangs love captivity, that there are fierce sharks swimming madly up and down our coasts sticking their noses through the port holes of pleasure steamers, and that love conquers all. It's enough to sadden any hyena.

Yrs sincerely
Virginia Graham.
