Anniversary Edition

Will all subscribers who have reserved copies of the Anniversary Edition of the Bulletin please get them by Friday of this week

Did you know that ten years ago before good radios were so cheap that Tryon had a wired program service operated by Romaine Stone and the Polk County Telephone Co. A big radio receiving set was installed in the Peanut Shell where Mr. Stone was living, and wires were run from it on telephone poles to subscribers with loud speakers all over town. The charge for the service was about $3 per month. Everybody got the same programs. William Eudy, Thomas Blackwell and Mack Averill were the local announcers. When static or interference was too bad they would play popular phonograph records. Important local meetings and church services were broadcast over the wired service from time to time and was very popular until radios were made better and cheaper.
