

The Lanier club of Tryon met Thursday, February 3, on the birthday of Sidney Lanier, who was born in Macon, Ga., 1842. The Asheville chapter and the Fanny Patton chapters of the U. D. C. observed the day with appropriate programs. Lanier died September 7, 1881, at Lynn, near Tryon, in the Wilcox home now owned by Mrs. John L. Jackson. He was so ill that he was moved from the inn to Wilcox home where he could be away from the crowds. Thursday's Asheville Times published a picture and story of him, and the statement of friends who said that the poet laureate of the South called the view of the mountains from his window at Lynn "his compensation."

There seems to be little excuse now, for anyone in North America who has a desire to play an instrument not to do so, or not to continue playing if he already knows how. In the latter instance, the Home Symphony invites you to sit in. If you can't play, Fun in Music offers you lessons—just choose your instrument. Your only expense is for the instrument and the instruction or part books which are issued at cost.—Doron K. Antrim in the Rotarian Magazine.
