CURB REPORTER

Some have asked when the Curb Reporter was going to finish his Florida trip. After leaving the most interesting old things in Florida at St. Augustine we came to the newest thing, and the largest of its kind in the world—Marineland, about 18 miles below St. Augustine and a few feet from the ocean where the largest fish bowl in the world was opened last June. So you people who haven't been to Florida within the past six months have something new to look forward to. If you can imagine the Tryon school auditorium filled with 11 feet of clear water you have an idea of the immense size of the concrete tank which has a platform around the brim allowing spectators to see from the top, then 100 windows called northoles at different elevations all around the sides making it easy to see under the fishes or on a level with them. They are of all kinds, sharks, porpoise, sting ray, jewfish and a thousand varieties weighing from an ounce to nearly a ton. Some of the fish with big eyes will come right up to the window and stare at you, too. The biggest crowds at the aquarium show up at feeding time when a diver goes down in the water and lets a porpoise and her calf feed from his hand. They would swim by and take mullet
