CURB REPORTER

Acting Postmaster G. I. Henderson has an opening in the federal government for junior graduate nurses. Salary $1,620 a year . . . Julian Hester has a copy of the Tryon Bee, published on Wednesday, March 7, 1900. The editor was George E. Morton. H. R. Goodell, now of Memphis and at present a subscriber to the Tryon Daily Bulletin, was correspondent from Spartanburg to the Bee and wrote that Spartanburg was to have its first exclusive ladies' shop established by Miss C. M. Campbell of New York City. Miss Campbell is now in Tryon. Mayor Missildine and Clerk Wm. E. Strong had signed an ordinance that made it unlawful for anyone to jump on or off trains at the station unless they were passengers or employees. The Lanier library notes had a note of thanks to Mrs. Lanier for her donation of Sidney's music book and poetry. There was a movement on foot to establish a telephone line connecting Tryon, Lynn, and Columbus. Geo. Dutton, brother of Mrs. Beatson died and was taken back to his birthplace, in New Hampshire for burial. Deacon John Orr was Supt. Congregational S. S., Rev. T. B. Justice, pastor of the Baptist church, Rev. J. D. Carpenter of the Methodist and Rev. Chas. Ferris, rector of the Episcopal. News
