Bus Firm Seeks To Extend Lines

The interstate commerce commission Tuesday conducted a hearing of an application of the Carolina Scenic Coach Line company of Spartanburg for authority to establish a motor bus line between Rutherfordton, N. C., and Tryon, N. C.

The hearing was conducted by W. W. McCaslin, ICC examiner, in the Charlotte, N. C., branch office, according to Associated Press dispatches.

The examiner said the showing would be considered for several weeks and a report, with a recommended decision, would be submitted to the commission at Washington for its action.

The Spartanburg bus company which has extensive lines in this and nearby states, is seeking to establish service between the two North Carolina cities, with the busses coming in from Rutherfordton connecting with the Spartanburg-Asheville line at Tryon.

Hamish Turner, official of the local company, was in Charlotte Tuesday for the hearing.

A hearing originally scheduled for Monday in Charlotte in moves by the Spartanburg company and the Queen City Coach company of Charlotte for authority to establish a line to connect Spartanburg and Chimney Rock, N. C., was cancelled, it was stated at the bureau's district office.
