

Save the Wild Flowers

halas, the Black Grandfather, and Pisgah ranges and their mountain spurs, including the Blue Ridge parkway and adjacent domain.

In these two million acres I would guarantee that the roots of our choicest flowers and shrubs will never be dug up—for any purpose!

But, who is to stop or supervise generally the increasing desecration of our wild flowers — root, plant, or flower? A long list of choice flowers have all but disappeared near human habitations and public highways.

Perhaps some nature-loving lawyers or legislators can offer a solution. Certainly someone, or some group of interested men and women should tackle a Save-the-Wild-Flower Movement, in areas not owned by the United States government. Surely broad tourist benefits in a crusade of this sort would outweigh any net profits to land owners through the sale of roots.
