JANUARY JASMINE

Have you seen my jasmine dripping down my little garden wall?

Have you seen it through the pelt of winter rain?

Of bitter wind and frosty night it has no fear at all,

My lovely Jason Jasmine with its splendid golden mane.

All summer through I boasted to my long-enduring friends

That my garden never left me without swelling bud or flower.

"And mark my words," I swaggered, "the succession never ends,

For my faithful little garden will not know a barren hour."

Yet when my last Chrysanthemum dropped low its tawny head,

And the Christmas roses shivered in the pallid winter sun,

I feared I'd been too confident, that happy hopes were dead,

And soon my eyes would nothing see but oak leaves crisp and dun.

But before the last rose faded, there a violet dared the cold,

And then the jasmine fluttered like a flock of fairy birds;

Yes, it fluttered through the frostiness and starred my wall with gold,

And set my heart to carolling a song that had no words.

Have you seen it; have you seen it—my adventurous jasmine gay?

It has no fear of winter chill, of snow or sleet no fear;

 It flings its lovely challenge to the January day,
 First herald of the Springtime, the jongleur of the year.
