The Mass Meeting

Contributed.

A large attendance of patriotic Polk County people heard Captain Rockwell speak at the Parish house Friday night. He told of the internal situation in France which preceded and precipitated the loss of the Battle of France. The audience was fascinated with his account of his escape from France from Paris to Bordeaux to rejoin the war ministry there.

The question of whether the United States would be called upon to send men across the seas came up. The belief of the committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies is that it will not be necessary to do so.

As eminent a thinker as Walter Lippman wrote in a recent column that this war is not the same as the last, where hundreds of thousands of men were stupidly hurled against machine gun fire. This war is being waged on production lines. Materials war are all important. The policy of the President, behind which the committee stands, is to get material to the allies in time to be effective. The fact that military casualties to date have not compared with the stupendous losses in the campaigns of World War 1 should be adequate testimony to the proposition that men from the U. S. are not needed.

Granted that a great many people here are willing and anxious to get in the fight actually, the only reasonable thing to do is to fight the aggressor nations the
