National Council Garden Clubs Visit Pearson's Falls

Approximately 300 Garden Club women from all over the United States visited Pearson's Falls wildlife sanctuary on Tuesday afternoon when they were guests of the Tryon Garden club for tea and a visit to what Donald Culross Peattie called the gem of the whole rhododendron belt.

Many of the visitors were members of the National Council of Garden clubs who are holding a conference in Asheville this week. The trip to Pearson's Falls was a part of the official program. The project is outstanding for two reasons. Its purchase and preservation as a wildlife sanctuary by the Tryon Garden Club alone is an achievement that merits the praise of all public spirited people. For it was a gigantic undertaking that took a lot of hard work and perseverance on the part of a small group of women before the final payment was made and a deed assured for posterity. The other reason is a natural one. Peattie, the noted naturalist, wrote recently, "Singing, foaming, pulsing, flashing, the mountain brook leaps seventy-five feet in one of the loveliest falls in the world; even in the height of summer it chills all the glen by the veils of spray that forever go blowing down it, setting maiden-hair and mountain rue to trembling in a perpetual wind. In no other part of the world have I ever seen such moss and ferns, such a wealth of lichens. Their commingled odors make Pearson's
