

CURB REPORTER

A large number of unmarried women have been seen making baby clothes lately, probably due to the war. Read the Red Cross article in this issue of The Bulletin. There are over 100 women knitters in Tryon who are contributing their spare time to the British War Relief Work Room, and according to an advertisement in Wednesday's Bulletin they have knitted over 1,000 garments of woolen clothing. They weighed 466 pounds. A pair of socks weighs only five ounces, but they made over 500 of them. Long sleeve sweaters weigh a pound each, and 60 of them were made since last December. There are 100 counties in North Carolina and if each
