Ralph C. Erskine, the author and lecturer, is busy writing a book between his duties of looking after things at Pacolet Plantation. One Sunday morning recently he made a hurried check up on a hen's nest just before going to church to sing a solo part for the special music. Imagine his surprise soon after arriving at the church and reaching into his pocket for something, to withdraw his fingers smeared with the gooey, stringy contents of a broken egg. In his haste in gathering eggs he had put one in his pocket and forgot about it. He made for the water spigot, and choir members gathered around to offer their assistance, and the minister dashed out to see what had happened, thinking some one had fainted. But not the Planter of Pacolet Plantation. He sang his part as if nothing had happened.
