Molasses for table use and home cleaning is ample, and it should be used whenever possible to stretch sugar. The darker molasses has a stronger flavor and also contains more iron than the lighter colored, more refined molasses.

With Army needs for textiles on the increase, few chairs and sofas will get new slip covers this spring. To keep slip covers looking and wearing their best, home economists suggest these cleaning and mending tips.

Hang slip covers up to air occasionally, outdoors if possible. Because some dirt sifts through, clean the upholstery while the covers are off.

"Tidies" can protect the main cover, save washing, lessen wear, and postpone patching. Make them of left-over pieces of slip cover material, if the cover was made at home, or select a fabric in a subdued, harmonizing color. Slip-baste in place so that the tidies will be easy to take off and wash.

If a cover needs mending and no matching scraps are available, get material for patches from a place that will not show,—the underside of a cushion, or the outside back. Fabric removed for repairs can be replaced with some harmonizing material. To prevent puckering later, all new fabric for patches should be pre-shrunk before it is sewed to slip cover.

Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt Price are the parents of a son.
