"The inaugural Block House Steeple-Chase, run at Tryon Saturday afternoon, was over an interesting course geographically. The course, perhaps a bit more than one mile, is around a knoll on which the 'Old Block House' now standing, having been moved by its present owner from its former location, somewhat nearer the highway. The line between North and South Carolina passes through the property. An old field stone is the marker, standing just off the riding course. On the north side of the stone is 'N. C.' On the south side, 'S. C.' The stone was erected Sept. 15, 1818. When the riders have made this course one time, they have ridden out of North Carolina into South Carolina and back again. And they have ridden through the territory of three counties—Polk, in North Carolina, Greenville and Spartanburg counties, South Carolina. To pass this property you cross the Southern Railway at the 'rock cut' overhead bridge, beyond Landrum. That was the main highway before the present paved road was built. The original 'Old Block House' was a fort and stood on the line between Spartanburg and Greenville counties, which was the line between territory ceded to 'the whites' to the east, and territory held by the Cherokee Indians to the west."—C. O. Hearon in The Spartanburg Herald.
