

4 Things to Guard Against

On Thursday afternoon the Tryon P.-T. A. heard Dr. C. C. Norton, dean of Wofford College, outline the basic principles of child development.

Four things to guard against are:

First, the anxiety neurosis in parent or teacher which is contagious and sets up negative image in child response.

Second, the too-possessive aspects which kill all initiative and ability to make decisions.

Third, the cynical home or class room, which causes young people to discount the real values of life.

Fourth, the parent fixation which stifles the child in complete dependency, preventing its growing into life and solving own problems.

Dr. Norton stressed the importance of the positive interest, and approach so that the child's defense mechanism would not be erected to hamper the relation. He repeated that parents should not seek to satisfy their egos in their children's lives, pointing out that this and the parent fixation are forms of selfishness far removed from love. The boy or girl should be allowed to develop his or her own soul.

The problem, he said, is often the problem of adults. Solve this problem and the child problem will be solved.

"We do not belong to a species which destroys itself to give birth to a race. More is involved in the development of the soul."

Democracy in the home and school is reckoning with separate individuals and personalities, and interests. Don't try to bend the twig unnaturally against the intent and equipment of nature. Build a life which will make a separate, individual contribution whether as doctor or as mechanic.
